from the director

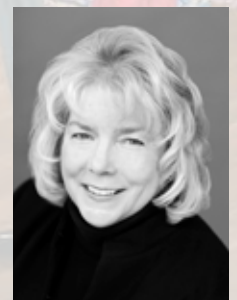

It was a banner year for the Columbus Museum of Art. We welcomed a record-breaking 102,000 visitors to our Picasso: The Great War, Experimentation and Change exhibition (June 10 – September 11, 2016).

Both a critical and a popular success, Picasso was named by artnet News as one of the seven blockbuster summer shows worth traveling for in 2016. We followed with Graphic Novelist Residency Exhibition: Ronald Wimberly (September 2, 2016 – February 19, 2017) and our fascinating intersection of science and photography, The Sun Placed in the Abyss (October 7, 2016 – January 8, 2017). The stunning and dynamic Bodies@Work: The Art of Ruben and Isabel Toledo (October 7, 2016 – June 18, 2017) helped Columbus garner a story in The New York Times celebrating our vibrant fashion industry. Visitors flocked to our holiday favorite, Think Outside the Brick: The Creative Art of Lego (November 11, 2016 - February 26, 2017) and Thomas Cole: The Artist as Architect (November 18, 2016 to February 12, 2017). A collaboration with The Ohio State University's College of Arts and Sciences Arts Initiative; the Arts and Theatre Institute, Prague, Czech Republic; and the National Museum, Prague, Czech Republic made it possible to present Shakespeare in Prague: Imagining the Bard in the Heart of Europe (February 10 – May 21, 2017). A Dangerous Woman: Subversion and Surrealism in the Art of Honoré Sharrer, which ran concurrently with Shakespeare in Prague, was called “visual magic” by local media and hailed by hyperallergic as a “remarkable exhibition” that was one of the twenty best exhibitions across the United States of 2017. During the Art Matters campaign, we promised to bring the best of the art world to central Ohio and from Picasso to A Dangerous Woman, we fulfilled that vow.

After a year in our new Margaret M. Walter Wing, we have continued to amplify our public value in equal measure with our public space. A study by Sarah Campbell, head of learning and programs at the Victoria & Albert Museum in London, England, found that “creative museum educators and new approaches to museum learning” highlight how CMA has grown in mission, learning, and community engagement. Many of CMA's new learning experiences emphasized the importance of relationships and helped increase accessibility to the arts for everyone. CMA collaborated with VSA Ohio, the state organization on arts and disability, to bring two important conferences to Columbus: the 2016 Arts and Autism Conference (September 20, 2016) and Building Access by Design (September 21, 2016). The 2016 Arts and Autism Conference brought together individuals with autism and their families, practitioners, support professionals, researchers, therapists, and advocates who specialize in the intersection of arts and autism. A day-long cultural accessibility training focused on providing professionals with resources, the Building Access by Design conference addressed big ideas and best practices related to people living with disabilities and arts inclusion. From world-class exhibitions to radically inclusive learning experiences, CMA truly created great experiences with great art for everyone.

LET ART SPEAK TO YOU.
